Tiananmen Square Massacre: An essay on the events leading up to and including June 3-4, 1989, Beijing Tracey Vale

With 2014 marking the 25th anniversary of Beijing's Tiananmen Square massacre, this paper explores a culmination of political events and protests, leading up to the horrific massacre of June 3 to 4, 1989. At this time, the Chinese government allowed their army to fire inadvertently on the crowd of 100000 unarmed, peaceful protestors fighting for the same rights as their Western counterparts. The crowd remained strong as firing began, many standing firm in the belief that the army was firing warning shots to scare them--not to kill. To this day, there is no memorial in China to mark the fallen, nor is it known how many died.
