Memoirs of an Ozark Pioneer and Civil War Soldier T.R. Coatney
Born and raised in Eagle Rock, Missouri, T.R. Coatney grew up in the 1950's listening to the oral history being passed down by his father. "As a kid I loved to sit around the woodstove at the old Eagle Rock store and listen to Dad and other old timers tell stories about the area. They couldn't care less about what happened in Little Rock or St. Louis. My dad, Willie Coatney, especially enjoyed telling stories about his iconic grandfather James Frances Coatney who proudly served in Company D of the First Arkansas Union Cavalry during the Civil War." – T.R. Coatney The Coatney Memoirs provide a candid glimpse into the lives of a simple pioneering family who tragically found themselves struggling to survive along the fragile seam that held North to South on the Missouri/Arkansas border when secession threatened to rip apart their beloved homeland. The youngest son of an elderly father, who was himself the youngest son of an elderly father, T.R. Coatney's Memoirs are a rare collection of childhood memories about his great grandfather, James Frances Coatney, a proud and patriotic private who served with honor during the Civil War. "For forty years I have tried to find glitches in the stories my father told, but every time I think I have found one, I find the stories ring true. I think he's "up there" grinning at me for trying so hard." – T.R. Coatney Edited by J.K. Phillips, local historian and author of "Jakie Creek – Legacy of an Ozark Outlaw," the Coatney Memoirs also include the complete Company D Roster of the First Arkansas Union Cavalry, a valuable reference for any Civil War enthusiast.
